About Myself

The maxim Ignorantia juris non excusat (ignorance of the law excuses not) have always remained influential in generating an urge within me to learn and explore laws. The exploration of laws guided me towards an alley of my interest i.e. international law. Ever-since the development of such interest I have approached the law innovatively. This capacity assisted me in achieving the highest academic degree in law. I proposed an international treaty for regulating transnational corporations against violations of international law in my doctoral thesis. The urge of knowing the law is still active and has prospered with chronic zeal. Research and innovation within the field of law will always remain a passion. This passion will always be in search of valuable transformation.
